Count Anton-Wolfgang von Faber-Castell surrounded by children from Chernobyl who spend an eventful day in Stein each year.

Dear Friends,

Faber-Castell is a family company with worldwide operations that has felt a commitment to its social responsibility from its earliest days. For example, my great-great-grandfather, Baron Lothar von Faber, co-founder of one of the first workplace kindergartens, also constructed company housing and supported schools. My father, Count Roland von Faber-Castell, continued this charitable work and spoke emphatically of the “law” of his forefathers that a company must also act with social responsibility. In March 2000 I signed the Faber-Castell Social Charter which applies world-wide and includes, for example, the ban on child labour.

Prompted by this responsibility, I set up a charitable trust for children in 2001, in order to sponsor the work of various humanitarian children’s aid projects, above all in developing countries. We hope that this will give many children a fair chance in life. The foundation will specifically support kindergartens, schools, children’s hospitals, orphanages and verifiably organised groups devoted to the care of children. Through the corporate commitment of Faber-Castell AG, in particular in Brazil, Peru, India and Indonesia, contacts exist to the above-mentioned fundraising groups, so that the foundation will be especially active in these countries.

With your donation, you are directly helping needy children, particularly in developing countries. With the assistance of my colleagues I will personally ensure that 100% of all donations benefit the children in the form of quick, traceable and practical support.

Yours sincerely,
